Steamboat Springs Boy Scouts Lend Hand In Mount Werner Water District's Campaign to Conserve Water

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, Colo. (May 29, 2007) – Steamboat Springs Boy Scout Troop No. 194 has agreed again this year to distribute material educating customers of the Mount Werner Water and Sanitation District about the benefits of water conservation.

Members of Troop 194 will spend the better part of two days June 9-10 delivering leaflets to the doors of residents in the District's service area. The leaflets will offer facts and tips about efficient water usage, with contact information for residents who want to learn more.

"The community benefited immensely last year from the Boy Scouts' contribution to our water conservation campaign," said Jay Gallagher, District manager. "We are grateful for their ongoing willingness to participate and their sense of civic-mindedness."

The members of Troop 194 are no strangers to community activities. They have also participated in the LiftUp food drives, Lions July Fourth Pancake Breakfast and Green-up Clean-up.

"Our kids understand the importance of water within our community and the role it plays in the ecosystem," said Scoutmaster Brian Berry. "We are pleased to participate in this worthwhile cause for a second straight year."

The District hopes to encourage residents and businesses to reduce water usage by 10 percent during the warmest periods of the summer, when high usage typically puts a strain on water treatment capacity. The campaign is designed to help the community save money in current service charges and future infrastructure expenses.

Anyone with questions about water conservation is encouraged to call Jay Gallagher at the District at 879-2424. Also, people can visit www.mwwater.com/conservation.html for a complete list of tips.
